Strata
John Sinclair:
In the creative cauldron that was the Detroit Artists Workshop we learned to develop cooperative ensembles and cross-cultural collectives, manage our own gallery and performance facility, produce our own concerts and cultural events, design and print our own books and magazines, publicize our products and productions, and keep our creative activity firmly rooted in the immediate community. It was the D.I.Y ethic in action. From the Workshop's fertile clime germinated the Strata Corporation.

Strata-East
http://www.redbullmusicacademy.com/magazine/strata-east-guide
Andy Thomas:
Strata-East's independence was not initially born out of choice. Charles Tolliver and Stanley Cowell had appeared on some of the great jazz sessions of the 1960s. A year after both playing on Max Roach's Members, Don't Git Weary they formed Music Inc., and released the LP The Ringer (under the name Charles Tolliver and Music Inc.) on Polydor in 1969. But by the time they had finished recording their next LP, jazz was losing its commercial pull. When they took the material to the majors at the start of the '70s they were met with indifference. "Our surprise at not being able to place the freshly recorded tapes with a major company for a sufficient advance morphed into our determination to self-produce it," explains Stanley Cowell. "The '60s Black Power movement in the United States had an effect on many black artists toward self-reliance, entrepreneurship and self-determination."
At the time, one such group of artists was operating out of Detroit under the name Strata. Cowell and Tolliver were so inspired by this grassroots collective they began to work on plans for a similar operation in New York. "Kenny Cox and Charles Moore came to New York with their papers for Strata Corp. and inspired us to form a corporation," recalls Cowell. "Strata-East, Inc. would be part of a larger artist-controlled concept. As we saw the potential for our catalogue to expand more rapidly, we decided to form Strata-East Records, Inc." And so the label was born at the start of 1971 with the Music Inc. Big Band LP.

It's hard to convey just how radical free improvisation seemed in the early 1970s. This music was genuinely shocking. When I first encountered albums such as Bailey/Bennink/Parker'sTHE TOPOGRAPHY OF THE LUNGS and Parker/Lytton's COLLECTIVE CALLS (URBAN) TWO MICROPHONES, I found them incomprehensible. An adventurous rock music diet of Soft Machine, Captain Beefheart, and the Mothers of Invention hadn't prepared me for anything like this. Nor had BITCHES BREW. Seeing Iskra 1903 in concert helped a bit; then I could at least relate certain sounds to certain instruments. But the musical rationale defeated me utterly. Compared to this stuff, Stockhausen seemed less like an iconoclast and more like Mozart. Mozart sounded like Liberace. Liberace sounded just like he looked - all spangles and pomade and toothy irrelevance. Music in general seemed tame, prissy. The members of Iskra 1903 weren't just musicians, they were revolutionaries (the group's name was that of a newspaper edited by Lenin), they were tampering with the sonic matter of the universe and at any moment it could explode in their faces. --Brian Marley, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ditfhVNZ3Vw

Interview with Steven Meinking
http://home.jps.net/~nada/ganick.htm

PG: The motivation behind the POTEPOETZINE and POTEPOETTEXT projects is the same as that behind my hard-copy projects: to distribute experimental poetry to as large an audience as possible. In the print media, it has been to publish readable editions that are affordable while being sufficiently elegant. I consider the print media activities of more importance for me, at least at this time. A print book is somehow more "permanent" than an online project. The online zines were never more than a side activity to complement and further the print work of the Press.

The relations set up between an artform (writing) and another artform as “foil” are similar to keeping oneself free, mentally and spiritually. In the Heideggerean sense, it is a “free-for” that one obtains in this manner — free-for-writing.

— "A Poetics Statement" from POTEPOETTEXTTHIRTEEN

Interview with Sheila Murphy (2007)
http://willtoexchange.blogspot.com/2007/06/sheila-e-murphy-interview-of-peter.html

PG: the last interview i participated in was for a poetry magazine named, atelier, around 1990, and much has happened since then. i have published many books of other poets, continuing with potes & poets press, my part of the venture ending in 2000. during the period up to 2000, p&p published 150 or so issues of A.BACUS, a series of limited editions called 'EXTRAS', 63 perfectbound books. there were three online journals, POTEPOETZINE, POTEPOETTEXT, and poethia.

i became committed to too many books ahead during 1999-2000, so sold the press, and took a much needed vacation from publishing till 2005, when, with the assistance of two friends, jukka-pekka kervinen and j hayes hurley, blue lion books was started. around that time, i started small-chapbook-project, both hard-copy ventures. these have been active and are now daily concerns of mine.

SEM: You actively participate in creating, teaching, and showcasing creative work. In your role as editor/publisher, you help shape the attention of the perceiving audience, by establishing viable vehicles for bringing forward what you consider important and/or interesting work. Please discuss how this role presently functions in the world of writing, and perhaps some moments in this role that have been important to you.

PG: if i understand your question correctly, you’d like me to talk a bit about the ventures i'm involved with at the moment. first, there is blue lion books, a joint venture of jukka-pekka kervinen [from finland], j hayes hurley [a novelist from Connecticut], and myself. the focus of a publishing venture is what determines the manuscripts that get published by that press.

i realize it sounds obvious, but so many times a writer will not pay attention to the publishing focus before submitting a manuscript. a lot of the heartache [!] of rejection can be avoided by paying attention to it.

blue lion books is always reading manuscripts and publishes books 250pp or more that develop an idea in total. a long book for a complete idea, that's the point. and an experimental, or previously-unseen idea, even an innovation, is preferred. so far we've kept to this pretty well.

blue lion books is a print-on-demand publisher.

a press brings to life, as it were, texts that an editor, in all his/her fallibility, which is ultimately for better or worse. an editor is therefore a link between writer and the reading audience, providing the major way a text can become 'fact'. readings are 'facts' also, but aside from recordings made, which are usually not so widely distributed as a book, they are most evanescent. a writer once told me, 'books are permanent', this, especially since acid-free paper is the standard of printers everywhere.

Blue Lion Books

blue lion books publishes experimental poetry, visual poetry, and fiction.
we specialize in books over 250 pages long, believing that an idea, if expressed, should be expressed in its fullest manner.

White Sky Books
white sky books was a press set up by Jukka-Pekka Kervinen to publish works by Peter Ganick.
Recently, the press has been expanded to publishing work by innovative, experimental poets.
These authors are on the cutting edge of literary activity, many with extensive publication histories that readers will become aware of as the press develops.
Further along in the pages are books by Ganick available here exclusively.
Most downloads are $2 and generous previews are presented.
Ganick is known as a publisher, writer, visual artist, photographer, and musician-by-training. He enjoys working with words the most however in the capacity of writer and/or publisher.
The new white-sky-books, featuring diverse writers, is an on-going project. Keep tuned.

http://whiteskybooks.weebly.com/about.html

In 2002, Ganick attended the Be-Blank conference at Ohio State University organized by John M. Bennett. He had known of the poets who would attend this conference, and shared with them a curious characteristic concerning their own writing: we had all worked diligently at writing for a number of years, but had gained a level of exposure we desired at the time. This conference proved seminal in Ganick's development. Here he met in-person writers he'd been in contact with for years. A life-long friend, Sheila E. Murphy; mIEKAL aND whose press Xexoxial Editions (then called Xerox Sutra Editions until pressure from the Xerox company occurred) published his first perfectbound book, HYPERSPACE CANTATAS. This book is being reprinted in 2008 in a facsimile edition. aND started the Internet mailing list, spidertangle, at that conference.

Around 2000, P&P had become over-committed to writers and Ganick felt he needed to concentrate on his own writing and his new interest, visual art. He sold P&P to Beth Garrison who carried the name forward for a few years afterwards, and fulfilled the commitments Ganick made. For this, he is very grateful.However, with a friend who he met from poethia days, Jukka-Pekka Kervinen, he couldn't stay out of publishing too long---so, with Kervinen, Blue Lion Books was founded in 2003. It is operative today as a print-on-demand press. For publishers wanting to operate on shoe-string budgets, print-on-demand is ideal. The imprint has continued to this day, publishing 'experimental' poetry/literature.

WSE--each of these are full-length books feature innovative writing by Leftwich. going through them, one by one, the changes of literary strategy documented in the daily entries is helpful to writers and readers in their pursuit of an experimental approach to writing.

Extensive Immanence
https://freelibs.org/extensive-immanence/
the stated goal of EXTENSIVE IMMANENCE is to publish very long works of experimental literature. each text is longer than 1,200 pages. these are sometimes written by computer manipulation, sometimes by human 'hands' on a computer keyboard, sometimes by email collaboration, other instances by combinations of any of the previous means.

as a stated length, more than 1,200 pages describes the EXTENSIVE part of the press name.

a quality of IMMANENCE is more complicated and evanescent. it is a term with as many definitions as people who use it. a general description, not a definition, would go something like: it covers the universe, a big claim for a work of literature, but this won't be the first time.

a title like EXTENSIVE IMMANENCE could be seen as a tautology. instead following the idea of Gertrude Stein that repetition is insistence, not repetition. the works included in the press-identity must be very long.

Interview with Mark Young http://willtoexchange.blogspot.com/2005/05/jukka-pekka-kervinen-interviewed-by.html

Cage and his textual work was one reason why I started to move to the writing field. Cage's mesostics as well Mac Low's acrostic and diastic writing had a great influence and were a starting point for me. Anyway my first attempts had more to do with musical composition. At the time I was planning to do a composition with prose notation and started to examine more closely the work of American contemporary/experimental writers. I found much more than I had expected, people like Jim Leftwich, John M. Bennett, Peter Ganick, Michael Basinski, Sheila E. Murphy and others. And that was all I needed! Instead of prose composition I started to make experiments with writing (without computer). They were published in 'Moria' in 2002 under the title 'meditations', then gradually I moved to work with a computer using the same programs I already had written for working with compositions. Those Shampoo #10 texts were my first attempts with computer and they use Cageian mesostics as their underlying structure.

Tibol Lobit Radio Show
http://ia601203.us.archive.org/31/items/TibolLobitRadioShowepisode13/Jukka-interview.txt

1) how do you create these odd sounds?
2) why do you enjoy having numerous netlabels and numerous sideprojects?
3) many people know about your music projects but what many dont know is that you are also a writer, creating what you call " noise novels". can you tell us what is the relationship between your writings and your music?

1) I create them using many different methods: with old game consoles, sample manipulation, field recordings, prepared acoustic instruments. Mostly the material is improvised by me, sometimes just collected to various places, I use a lot of my lofi digital voice recorder. All material is manipulated, mashed, mixed and scrambled by my own programs, I don't use other software, just own programs I write using different languages and methods.

2) Well, not sure if I enjoy of them very much, ha ha ha, I produce a lot of stuff, various pseudonyms have two functions: a. to organize my output and b. I spread my music for free, I use mostly soundcloud, I'm not going to pay of giving my stuff free, that's against my principles so I create new project when the 120 minutes if full. But seriously, I tried to organize, different pseudonyms and netlabels for one type of music or output, it btw failed, as in most cases when I try some organizing, a bigger mess has been left behind.
3) I started composing music at the age of 10, 40 years ago. Same time I interested of poetry, e.e. cummings, ezra pound, to mention two. I tried to write, made some experiments, but it took time until I really started to write, at 2000-2001, first making kind of collages, cut ups etc, later incorporating computer, algorithms and own programs. My current music is very much based on my experimental writings, same methods, same ideas, even same programs or algorithms are used making both art forms, they are like feeding each other, ideas are circulating, a kind of metamorphosis of a textual/sonic world.

" In 1976 or 1979 - no one remembers the exact date - the term NEO replaced the term NOISM. NEOISM is a PREFIX and a SUFFIX which coupled together make no sense whatsoever. The Neoists wanted to recycle everything: the 1960s avant-garde (Fluxus, Minimal, Mail Art), and they were more interested in myth making and media manipulation than creating serious art works. The Neoists were pranksters, low-scale saboteurs similar to Fritz Teufel, Dieter Kunzelmann and the satirist Wolfgang Neuss, but with the crucial qualification that the Neoists were a thousand times more obscure." http://www.stewarthomesociety.org/neoism/neobier.htm

from A Brief Bible of Defiant Reading (08.01.04)

the human eye is quicker than a chinese hopping spider. thus in reading the eye traverses the terraced chasms of the tao.

“give a man a fish and he will work all day. teach him to fish and he will eat you for lunch.” —chairman lao tzu from Richmond Browne's letter to Jerry Coker, in Improvising Jazz:

"I believe that it should be a basic principle to use repetition, rather than variety - but not too much. The listener is constantly making predictions; actual infinitesimal predictions as to whether the next event will be a repetition of something, or something different. The player is constantly either confirming or denying these predictions in the listener's mind. As nearly as I can tell, the listener must come out right about 50% of the time - if he is too successful in predicting, he will be bored; if he is too unsuccessful, he will give up and call the music 'disorganized'.
Thus if the player starts a repetitive pattern, the listener's attention drops away as soon as he has successfully predicted that it is going to continue. Then, if the thing keeps going, the attention curve comes back up, and the listener becomes interested in just how long the pattern is going to continue. Similarly, if the player never repeats anything, no matter how tremendous an imagination he has, the listener will decide that the game is not worth playing, that he is not going to be able to make any predictions right, and also stops listening. Too much difference is sameness: boring. Too much sameness is boring - but also different once in a while."
